Dear Priya,

For many years, PARADE has honored outstanding high school athletes with its All-America distinction. Many of those PARADE All-Americans have gone on to stellar careers in pro football, basketball and soccer. Some, like Michael Jordan, Shaquille O'Neal, Joe Montana and John Elway, have become household names for their incredible athletic ability.

PARADE also has a long history of highlighting important social issues, documenting creative community programs, and recognizing the extraordinary efforts of ordinary people who endeavor to change the world.

So this year, for the first time, we decided to shine the All-America spotlight on outstanding students who give of themselves to make their communities better through service. We received hundreds of nominations from across the country and had the near-impossible task of narrowing the list down to just 50 honorees—10 each in five categories—and you have made the cut! We are delighted to inform you that you are among the honorable mentions on the 2010 PARADE All-America High School Service Team!

We offer you our sincere and heartfelt appreciation and congratulations for all the important work you do for your community—and the world. And like the superstar athletes mentioned above, we expect we'll hear more from you in the future. We encourage you to continue your good work.

Best regards,
